WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

One of the things we're trying to assess is the different influence of the planets in the different roles. This is the distinction I propose. We need individual testimony to see if the idea holds water.

- team* The team you are born into provides a kind of a world view, a framing of what matters and what is wanted of you. You can see evidence of your team by the work that comes naturally to you. The tasks you keep finding yourself doing. The things you notice need doing. What you volunteer for. The things that make you wonder why others around you don't do them, because they seem so obvious to you. If you are in a position that expects of you a different focus, these currents of attraction may seem like rabbit holes, distractions, the way you always go off track.
- day shift* Born during the day, your team leader is also your shift boss. This gives a consistency to the expectations placed on you. This consistency can be helpful for the clarity, or difficult because it limits the wiggle room.
- night shift* Born after dark, your team leader is not actually present to enforce the team's goals and ethics. There is a shift boss on duty, leading by proxy. No matter how true to the team's manifesto the shift boss is, the press and pressures, the rewards and expectations will be shaded by other tones. You might notice this as ways your basic inclinations are amplified or constrained, and how you feel about doing the work or your ability to meet expectations.
- role* The ruler of the hour in which you were born speaks to your particular contribution to the team effort. This is how you show up and how you do the work. You can find evidence of this in what matters to you, what motivates and deters. Maybe also in the effect you have on others. And the things you expect of yourself and feel bad about when you don't perform up to your own standards.

THE PRACTICE

This is what the practice of astrological divination looks like for me...

Interpretation begins with an assessment of condition. A description of context. What is it you are looking at? What do you see there? What stands out to you? condition

The process of spelling out what you see helps to begin to put the details into some kind of order and often, one thing spoken leads to another you hadn't noticed before. And too, the work of describing the observed context sparks associations.

Given what you see in the condition you can then make a prediction of how that might play out. What are the implications? Take the time to express your interpretation of the patterns. See where it takes you. This is the metaphoric stage. It is much more about flavor than actualities. prediction

Testimony is a presentation of evidence. This is the place for actuality, a reflection of lived experience that speaks to the noted condition in some way. What is really going on in the area in question? How does the dynamic actually play out? It may or may not agree with the prediction. Either way is interesting and will deepen your understanding of the dynamics. testimony

CONDITION	PREDICTION	TESTIMONY	example
Day Boss Mercury is in a water sign	May be more inclined to rhyming than analysis.	I have to make an effort to keep my prose from being guided more by rhythm than reason. I believe arguments that sound good, because they sound good.

RECTIFICATION - IF YOU DON'T KNOW A BIRTH TIME

Weekday	Before Dawn	During the daylight	After Dark	Who?
Sunday
Monday
Tuesday
Wednesday
Thursday
Friday
Saturday

If all you have is a birthdate and no time, there are 3 team possibilities for each day of the week. Consider the implications of each and see if you can sense which feels most resonant for the person born on that weekday.

Here we have listed the 5 presidents for whom I could find no birth time.

Same information as the org chart, just looking at it in a different way.
